Ryan Rossi

Charger R/T

THE Garage BUILT BY Eastwood

Looking at the immaculate Plum Crazy Purple finish on this 1968 Dodge Charger, you'd never know it was the work of just one man. But that's what Ryan Rossi did, resurrecting it from a rusty heap entirely on his own in the 11' x 20' cinder block garage next to his house. A BMW technician by trade but with a passion for classic Mopars, it took him 15 years to complete, but the effort was clearly worth it.

"The first 10 years were all bodywork, including building a rotisserie, replacing the floors, trunk, quarter panels, and rear valance," Ryan tells us. "Then the suspension and drivetrain. The interior is still in the works," he adds even though it's nearly complete at this point.

He picked up the non-running donor in 2001, but it sat for the first six years as wife, daughter and house took priority. It gave him time to figure out a game plan. Originally, he just wanted to drop in a 440 engine, weld up the rusty floors, paint it black, and drive it. "But as it sat in storage, my vision changed to a complete restoration and some upgrades," he recalls, "including fuel injection on a bored and stroked big block, plus an overdrive transmission."

He built up a 440 V8 to 512 cubic inches, performing all the work on his own except for the engine boring. He built the 46RH overdrive automatic on the same bench. But the biggest challenge for Ryan, who works with mechanical issues all day long, was the repairing the bodywork. As he puts it, "It was a rusted-out basket case... I did all the blasting, stripping, cutting, welding, grinding, paint..." adding that he fabricated a rotisserie specifically for his car and his tight workspace.

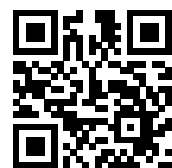

Ryan says he couldn't have done it without Eastwood. "I used a lot of Chassis Black. I also used Eastwood's high-temp ceramic engine paints on the engine, transmission, brakes and most suspension components. I went through many cans of Internal Frame Coating inside the new rockers. Fast Etch rust stripper worked great and was a real time saver. I can't even remember all the Eastwood polishes and buffers I used, as well as some of the other special coatings."

The results speak for themselves. Ryan says the Charger is like a "people magnet" whenever he pulls into a car show or stops for gas. It's a testament to planning, patience, and persistence, and he just looks forward to finishing the interior so he can really start sharing it with other Mopar fans.
